DARING ATTEMPT AT HIGHWAY ROBBERY.

A WOMAN AND HER SON STOPPEH ON THE LOAD FISTOLS PRESENTED AT THEIL BLADS AND THEIR MONEY HEMANDED

[New Albany Ledger, 8th] At an early hour this morning a most daring attempt at highway robbery was made by two thieves. Mrs. Iving and her son, the latter aged about fifteen years, were on their way in a wagon to attend market in this city. They reside in Clark county, not very far from Silver creek. They had reached n point in what is known as Collins a lane, about half way between the residence of Mr. Collins and Silver Creek, when suddenly two men stepped out into the road. One of these men see zed the reins of the mule that was drawing the wagon, while the other, presenting a pistol to the head of Mrs. King, demanded her money, telling her in the most obscene and profane manner that if she did not deliver up all the maney she had he would hlow out her brains and the her's also.

Cincinnati, Oct. 5, 1867.

To the Editor of the Louisrille Journal: In vain have I attempted to find some news this week that would interest your readers, and the same old things over and over again. The exceedingly dry weather that we have been having makes every hranch of business dull, and the wholesale merchants who prepared large stocks for the fall and winter trade, are greatly disappointed in not having the expected trade. But the recent rains put forth renewed prospects, and the drooping counternauces are changing to cheerfulness. The Queen City is putting on her golden dress, and soon expects to be herself again, and the October trade is expected to be the heaviest of the season

The remains of a gentleman lost in an Alpine glacier, fifteen years ago, were lately found. In the year 1852, the Syndic of Gressonay fell into a crevasse on the Aventine glacier (under the Breithorn, on the Italian side), so deep that though men were let down by ropes they were unable to reach his body. A few weeks ago the landlord of the little inn at the head of the Val d'Ayns, into which the Aventine glacier descends, found these remains on the surface of the ice, and yesterday they were brought down for hurial by a large party of the inhabitants. The bones were hroken into fragments, as night have been expected, by the pressure of ice. Strange to say, however, the unfortunate man's telescope was found almost uninjured.
